Second Collection of Italian Works Will Be Sold in This City.

best possible way.
So that the second collection of Italian tworks of art which Prof. Volpi has brought to this country and which is on public view in the galleries of the American Art Association cannot create aurprise no matter how much success it may achieve, for success is now associated in advance with Prof. Volpi's name.

He has not confined himself as an antiquary to any epoch period. It was his aim to make as impressive a showing as possible of the unrivalled skill and shillty of Italian furniture makers of the best schools. In addition to much work of the liftsenth, sixteenth and sevwork of the lifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth centuries there are a number of lively and ornamental specimens that date from the eighteenth century.

The rare masterpieces in wood, with the renaissance textiles, embroideries and other works of art now assembled, seem to fit into as perfect an ensemble as did the furnishings of the Davansati Palace, which perhaps is not remarkable since the same expert formed both collections. They have been arranged in the present galleries in an admirably intilligent way, so that the eye is comforted and the study of the pieces made easy. One gallery has been hung exclusively in reds by Miss Lorens; red velvets and reds by Miss Lorens; red velvets and damasks upon the walls, and with the cid world furniture the reproduction of the effect of a salon in an old Florentine and a salon in an old riorentine palece is complete.

Among the carvings there is an important marble attributed to Rossellino, the pupil of Donatello. It is a caimly serene portrayal of the youthful St. John clad in a gostskin, wearing sandals and bearing a staff which is surmounted with a cross. A fifteenth century Burgundian carved wood "Pieta" will attract a great deal of attention. The carving is colored and gilded, the figures, beautifully grouped, being placed beneath a Gothic canopy. The whole work is charged with feeling. A Siennese colored wood "Annunciation" dates from the fifteenth century. The Virgin stands clasping a book and the sweeping robe of red takes the most graceful lines.

Torre Cotta by Paget.

"The Apparition of Venus to Assess" is a seventeenth century terra cotta by Pierre Puget, Aeneas being a handsome youth in armor, with plumed helmet and cloak, and Venus, looking her best, floats temptingly above him in the air. A sar-

The tapestries in the exhibition are of quite exceptional character, most of them being of Piemish weave after Italian designs. One of them has an especially interesting history. It is recorded by Vasari that Glovanni d'Udipe.

Like the Veipi sale of last year, this collection contains many early Italian chairs, the type knewn as the "Dante" predominating. There are two sixteenth contury Dantescan chairs in the piaces of bonor in the entrance gallery that will be much admired for their lines. There are many Umbrian carved walnut stools and Savonarola chairs.

A sixteenth century Umbrian cassoni to boidly carved with ornamental acanthus leaves and figures of Justice and Mercy, the scrolled escutcheon being supported by two Puttl. Another distinguished cassoni bears the arms of the Marigneli family of Rome. The cabinets and dosks are ambellished with carvings in the most splendig way. These would create a sensation had not the public been prepared in advance for them.

Some of these cabinets have the sturdy architectural simplicity of sacristy cabinets, others are embellished with figures of saints and heroes in a lavishly gothic fashion. A Ligurian carved walnut cabinet in the style of the "Banbocci" is one of the stay pieces.

A painted Venetian table of rectangular lines has great style and so have a Venetian desk and cabinet, with Chinese ernaments or red on gold lacquer. A Florenting grille from the nut cabinet in the style of the "Banbocci" is one of the star pieces.
